

THE WAY FORWARD AFTER ADVANTAGE JA: INSIGHTS FROM OECD WORK ON AGEING

Tiago Cravo Oliveira Hashiguchi
Health Policy Analyst, Health Division

Final Conference of ADVANTAGE Joint Action
27 November 2019, Brussels, Belgium

OECD Work &

advantGE
MANAGING FRAILTY

Preventing
Ageing Unequally

Social Inequalities in Health and Health Systems

The Pursuit of Gender Equality

Renewing Priority for Dementia

Social Protection for Long-term Care in Old Age

Long-term Care Workforce

Promoting Healthy Ageing

Working Better
with Age

Economics of Public Health

People-Centred
Health Systems

Tackling Wasteful Spending on Health

Health Statistics and Indicators

Focus on Promoting Healthy Ageing

Support prevention policies to avoid unhealthy behaviours before they take hold

Develop and strengthen health and long-term care systems to provide good care to those who need it, while protecting them from excessive costs

Encourage active participation in the community through age-friendly community initiatives and demand- and supply-side policies to encourage a healthier, longer working life

The Way Forward

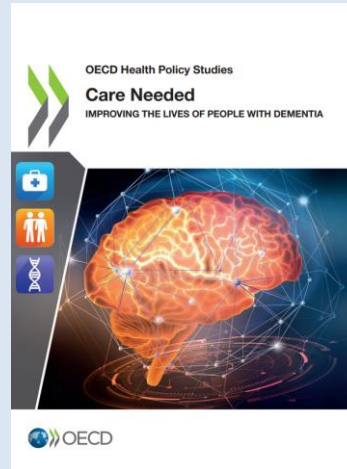

“Frailty actions should enhance synergies with other existing programmes, for example, healthy ageing, chronic diseases, dementia, palliative care and falls and bone health. Creating a separate “vertical approach” around frailty should be avoided.

All actions to prevent and manage frailty, both at individual and population level, must be evidence based. Because of the information gaps, developing a monitoring and learning system to track progress, make any necessary adjustments, assess the effectiveness of the approach, and to learn lessons for the future, is advisable.”

Getting in touch with the OECD

Find our publications and more at www.oecd.org/els

Follow us on Twitter

@OECD_social

Email me

tiago.cravooliveira@oecd.org